UANL
UNIVERSIDAD AUTÓNOMA DE NUEVO LEÓN

NOMBRES Y MATRICULAS

2251959	CASTRO ALVAREZ JACK LEVI
2250780	GOMEZ VELAZQUEZ WILLIAM
2250824	GONZALEZ MEJIA CARLOS ADRIAN
2251387	HERNÁNDEZ VALERO JESÚS DANIEL

AULA	GRUPO	TURNO
144	5V1	MATUTINO

ESPECIALIDAD

Técnicos en Inteligencia Artificial BPI

DOCENTE

Jesus Alejandro Juarez Gonzales

FECHA

MONTERREY, NUEVO LEÓN A DOMINGO 8 DE NOVIEMBRE DEL 2026

Grammar in our brief

We read the brief of Track 3, "From Voice Note to Order", in the Challenge Tracks document. The client is Ferretería Los Nogales, a hardware store in Monterrey that receives its orders as WhatsApp voice notes. We found one sentence for each grammar topic and wrote what it expresses.

Grammar topic	Sentence from our brief	What is it expressing?
Present Perfect	"For years, clients have sent their orders as WhatsApp voice notes."	Real experience. An action that started in the past and continues today: clients still send their orders this way.
Second Conditional	"If the store read its voice notes automatically, the staff would prepare the order while the client is still on the way."	Present imagination. An imaginary situation today: the store does not read its voice notes automatically yet.
Perfect Conditional	"If someone had confirmed the size, the store wouldn't have lost that sale."	Past hypothesis. A past situation that did not happen: nobody confirmed the size, so the store lost the sale.

How we identified each structure

Grammar topic	Form	Key words in the sentence
Present Perfect	have / has + past participle	have sent · for years
Second Conditional	If + past simple, would + base verb	If the store read … would prepare
Perfect Conditional	If + past perfect, would have + past participle	If someone had confirmed … wouldn't have lost

The brief has more examples of the Present Perfect, such as "The staff have typed every order by hand, and they have made mistakes with quantities and sizes." We chose the first sentence because "for years" shows clearly that the experience started in the past and continues today.